

DATA CENTER FIRST-CALL CHECKLIST

What to capture before the conversation moves into documents, site access, or price

Use during or immediately after the first developer call. Record what was actually said; do not rely on memory.

CALLER AND PROJECT

Date / time

Landowner / property

Caller name / title

Company / client represented

Phone / email

Project name / county

QUESTIONS TO ASK

1. What type of right are you seeking: purchase, option, lease, easement, access, or something else?
2. What acreage or part of the property are you interested in, and can you send a map?
3. Who is the actual developer, buyer, tenant, or principal behind this contact?
4. What is the project stage, and what approvals, utility capacity, water, permits, or financing remain?
5. Are you requesting exclusivity, a no-shop period, confidentiality, site access, testing, or a recorded document?
6. What is the proposed timeline for diligence, signing, extensions, construction, closing, or termination?
7. What payments are proposed now, and which later payments are separate from option money?
8. Who pays survey, title, environmental, geotechnical, appraisal, legal-review, and restoration costs?

BEFORE THE CALL ENDS

Ask that all proposed terms, maps, and draft documents be sent in writing.

Do not agree to exclusivity, access, confidentiality, price, or signing deadlines on the call.

Set the next contact date and identify what information should arrive first.

Notes / promises / follow-up items